Introduction

Hi, I'm Gabriel.

And what I'm about to share with you will change the way you think about pickup and meeting women, forever...

Have you ever really wondered why some people just get this whole meeting women thing the very first few times they learned this stuff and start getting immediate results, while others learned like forever and going out but are still struggling?

That's because they are missing the most essential core component that makes pickup and meeting women work that everybody is leaving out.

You are about to discover a revelation I came upon when I was trying to improve this area of my life also, that will change the whole community on its head and the way you look at this game...

My Story

Well, I could write a complete autobiography, but I won't bore you with that as I know you want to get into the real goodies of this book, but I also want to let you know where I'm coming from...

I came from a strict family upbringing. My parents moved around a lot, and I eventually grew up in a very small town. As typical as it was always being the new kid, I was constantly teased and made fun of for everybody's self-amusement, and so I isolated myself from all forms of social human interactions and avoided them as much as possible, and became a loner, didn't even have a single friend growing up.

I thought that my problem was going to automatically solve itself as I got older, but nothing was further from the truth...

Oh, not only was I terrible with women, but with people in general, socially. It was so bad to the point that I even thought that I had some sort of social disorders, like Asperger's syndrome.

It was utter torture. I was depressed and didn't bother leaving the house, until I snapped and hit a threshold that enough was enough, and didn't care anymore and just went out by myself without any goal in mind but to just get out of the house.

Man, was I embarrassingly horrible in social gatherings in every possible way from being creepy to almost getting arrested, but I learned and practiced my social skills and calibrated them.

However, in my struggle my lucky break came when I met these guys who were not only good with women but people in general. They were naturally social with everybody, *hence social natural.

They took me under their wings and I learned from them and went out and experimented, and that was when I really noticed a difference.

There was something about these social naturals' behavior that they were unconsciously aware of, as most people who are good at something don't really know how to explain how they are doing it, they just do it naturally without thinking, but I did coming from a conscious different perspective.

To make a long story short...

Gradually, I started to perform socially at their high-octane social level and the friends within the social natural's social circle, who first questioned why even let, me, this loser socially awkward guy to hang out with them, started to like me and became close buddies.

The Revelation

So now you know my story...what does it come down to?

...your social skills.

For me, I never took that opportunity to develop my social skills, and there are a lot of us who didn't either but won't embarrassingly admit it; and that's ok, it is not our fault.

It could have been...

- we were raised in a unsupportive environment that was not conducive to human interactions
- our family were not social people and discouraged us from interacting with others and even other people discouraged us
- we were over-sheltered
- we were bullied causing us to be lonely outcasts
- we avoided it
- we didn't like it
- we were restricted
- we were homeschooled
- we were the geeks/the nerds
- we moved around a lot....

...and many other countless reasons you can think of

However, we can still learn this and be even better than those who have been social all their lives because we come from a different perspective and understanding than most people, and this gives us a conscious awareness of both sides of the coin having personally gone through them ourselves.

Why do We Need to Learn How to be Social?

Now why do we need to learn how to be social?

Well, a long time ago back to our own ancestral days, we lived in colonies and tribes. We needed this tribe to survive, otherwise if you take one member out he or she would die. It was just very basic primitive social behaviors.

We were like machines. The men would hunt and protect the tribe while the women would take care and nourish the younglings.

Pretty much it was the same type of social behaviors everyday, nothing fancy and sophisticated social skills were required. They do the same things throughout the day, everyday, and feel and think about the same things, like robots.

It was just basically like only hanging around with your family

24/7/365.

And to this day when you hang out with your family, does it take that much effort to interact with them?

No, you're most relaxed and requires the least amount of social skills effort.

However, as society evolved, human behaviors started to get sophisticated; no longer were we acting on the simple, same old day-to-day behavior, but different human emotions emerged in us that caused us to act in more complex ways.

We started to converse more with outsiders, no longer just people in our tribe but those from many different tribes.

And fast-forward to today, the world has become very global and diverse, requiring much more advanced social skills and will continue to require more sophisticated social skills to thrive in today's society.

We are not used to dealing with these many people and having many different relationships and having these different societies running into each other, so now we have to have ways of dealing with this and harness our social powers.

No longer those with the strongest brute physical force have the power, but those who have the most social savviness do.

We are living in a social society, and to get what we want we have to be socially aware and skilled to maneuver successfully ahead, unlike our ancestors who just used brute force to take what they wanted.

For meeting women, we can't bash them on the head with our clubs and drag them by the hair to our caves.

The laws and modern society do not tolerate and punish these outdated barbaric behaviors in our more civilized world.

For most guys today in meeting women, we have to groom ourselves, makes ourselves look good, go out, approach them, talk to them, get them attractive to us, get their number (if we can't seduce them), get them on the phone, make them meet up with us, talk with them again, get them attractive again, and then try to seduce them to make them our girlfriend.

That's a lot of work don't you think, unlike our ancestors who just cut to the chase?

The truth is, we are becoming more of a super society and more interconnected with each other, and this will continue to happen and even faster as the populations increase exponentially.

So we have to evolved into sharp social-being, and we can meet people that can add values to our life enriching it for the betterment.

From Seduction Community to Social Community

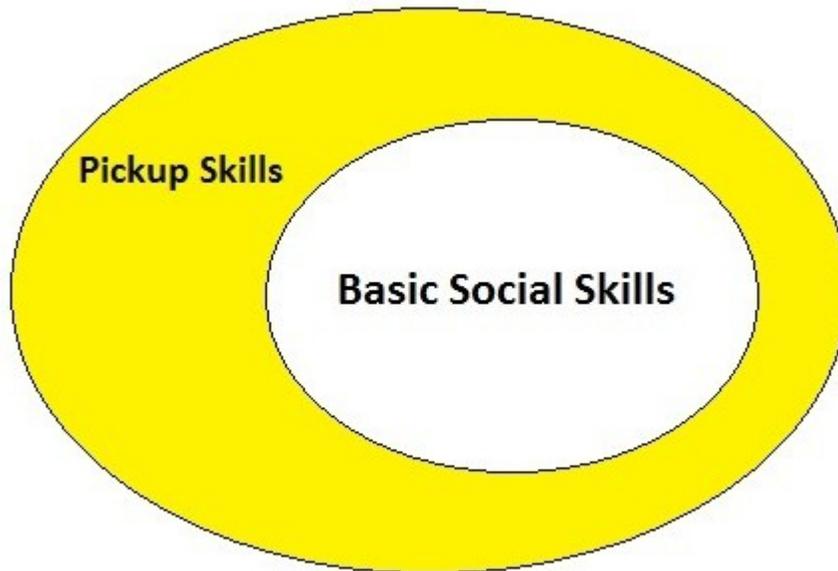

Having been involved in the Seduction Community myself, I did notice a flaw that it was focused so much on picking up women that it failed to mention the most important part of all your basic social skill that builds upon and set everything else.

Now why do we need to learn social skills for pickup?

Because social skills is the foundation for pickup, if you have bad social skills you're not going to get far in your pickup skills.

You see, a lot of us grew up without developing our social skills and that was the beginning cause for our lack of skills in handling women.

And the diagram below depicts the process where most guys who are struggling to learn pickup for a long time.

They are missing the basic social skills, as you can see is the empty white area, and so they learn pickup skills, the yellow area, that builds on top of that empty basic social skills; therefore, they have a weak foundation and the reason why hardly achieving any result and making learning pickup so much harder.

Learning pickup skills without this basic social skills, your pickup skills can eventually crumble.

The Evolved Pickup Artist (aka Social Artist)

The bigger picture is to focus on your social skills.

Social skills can be applied to all parts of your life, from social, personal, dating, and even professional (like have you thought about how marketing is almost like meeting women when comes to closing the deal?)

Why not be a social artist who is highly socially skilled and have all aspects of your social life handled rather than just picking up women?

Being a social artist is an art of course. The art to be the designer of your social life because you design the social dynamics interaction the way they want to bring the outcome you want, and picking up women is just one element of it.

When you are naturally socially skilled, having women in your life is natural, almost too easy, like becomes secondary.

So How can You Develop Yourself to Become the Most Social Person You can be?

How can you improve your social skills now, when you are not socially skilled in the first place to socialize effectively to build your social skills?

Quite a dilemma, huh?

Here we have an example of "can't find a job because you don't have experience, and you don't have experience because you can't find a job."

People will tell you the only best way to improve your social skills is to get out there and socialize and talk with as many people as much as possible.

Yes that is true. There is nothing like learning by doing.

But that is like throwing you on an deserted island all by yourself and tell you to just survive and "Good luck, you can do it!", without the necessary equipments.

You need the right tools first to help you learn how to socialize effectively whenever you are out in social gatherings, and they will also help you in terms of learning social calibration.

I call this your sociability, your toolbox basically of your social mojos, like your techniques, stories, humor, lines, questions, routines, openers, and conversational materials that can be pulled out at anytime to be used.

Comedian always have their toolboxes stocked with jokes and routines before going on stage.

The tools you would want to have the most are great stories, as telling stories are pretty much the biggest things that fuel your social interaction. Have plenty of them in your arsenal.

Build up your sociability and when armed with these tools you can practice them to develop your social skills, and you can stop relying on them as your social skills improve.

Eventually you start understanding the pattern of a good social dynamics interaction. Your social intuition will sharpen by knowing how one particular response will trigger another, and you will know how to control any social interaction.

Social Structures

What is it about people who are very social?

They always seem to be great conversationalists and have a lot to talk about no matter how irrelevant or random the topic is, and are quick in generating responses.

Unfortunately, not all of us are socially witty and have spontaneous conversational materials to talk about every time related to that particular situation.

That was why before I mentioned you want to build a large social toolbox of your mojos to avoid being the quiet one.

Now you are probably thinking...

"So now I have to memorize a ton of stories, routines, and conversational materials until my mind explodes?"

No, that is the good news.

You don't have to memorized a whole lot of routines to have tons of conversational materials, if you just memorized the structural formula of those routines, but most importantly, develop your own "social structures."

What is a social structure?

It is your very own structural formula for generating unique new responses in any form of social interaction.

I'm pretty sure you have heard about using canned scripted materials and routines for interacting with women and getting them attractive to you.

How about instead of memorizing the routines and canned materials, why not just learned the formula and structure of those canned materials and routines so that way you can plug it into your social structure for your current particular social situation to generate new conversational materials every time on the spot.

People who are socially skilled always coming up with quick responses have, without realizing it, developed a lot of social structures built upon each and connected from all the socializing they have done making it easily and quickly for their architectural social mind to guide them in generating quick response subconsciously.

Think of it like a much more completed social blueprint for their mind, compared to those who are unskilled.

If you were a math geek like I was, do you remember the quadratic formula, well it looked something like this:

$$x = \frac{-b \pm \sqrt{b^2 - 4ac}}{2a}$$

All you had to do was memorized this one little formula, and you could pretty much do all sorts of algebra problems.

One of the most famous structure in improvisation is "the yes and..." where you agree with whatever the other person said and add more details to continue the flow. Just knowing this one little formula structure, and you can act out a whole lot of improvisational scenes.

Variables Replacement Social Structure

One example I teach in my book the Art of Social Natural applies to storytelling, is that you alter the details of your story template to add the elements from your current situation into that story.

One of those structural alterations you can do to your stories to make them interesting and unique every time is Variables Replacement.

The facts and variables replacement makes the stories sound refreshingly unique and different every time. Basically, the most easy and common form of variables replacement you can alter is the time and place.

If you were just telling some mundane things to a girl that happened over a year ago just for the sake of telling it to fuel the interaction, she would be wondering why you were telling a story that long ago, unless you had some sorts of moral lesson learned or something that extremely impacted your life, like you almost went to jail.

The more up-to-date and modern the story is, the more impact it will have regardless how trivial it is, and I will even go as far to say that you can tell just about anything as long as it is just happened because it is understandable that you are still feeling the after-effect of it.

Here is a simple example if this really did happen to you and you said this to a girl:

“I saw the cutest little dog with a Mohawk 2 month ago back at when I was at home in LA! How do they pull that off?”

Now notice the difference between that first one and this second one:

“I saw the cutest little dog with a Mohawk just a second ago back at (wherever current location you are near at)! How do they pull that off?”

The first one is, “why are you telling me this now?”

The second one is more profound for it just happened to you, and she can also feel what you are feeling about a cute little dog; and as a added benefit, this can also be used as a natural simple opener, and the justification in her mind that you're asking her is because it just happened.

Therefore, this becomes your structural story templates based on your real life, you can tell all the time with variables replacement, and no longer do you have to memorize a whole lot of routines that are not your own:

“I saw the cutest little dog with a Mohawk _____ back at _____! How do they pull that off?”

Have general stories based on your life and experience or take an interesting story you know making it happened to you, and replace the time and place to keep them new and fresh, while keeping the story templates' theme, event, and everything else the same.

Say for example, if something were to have happened to you 6 months ago, you could replace that variable of time, 6 months ago, to have happened this week or last week or early this month or yesterday or even early that day to keep up it fresh, or they will be wondering why you are telling them something from over 6 months ago; in fact, why do you still care after 6 months?

Remember the most up-to-date the time of your story, the more impact it will have when you tell it, because it will feel like only just now, since that event happened to you.

Saying Goodbye to Memorized Routines

No longer do you have to memorize a whole lot of routines that are not your own, when you plug in your present situation (where you are at in the interaction) into your social structure of your openers, stories, and other conversational materials.

Learn to recognize and be aware of social structures of not just what is attracting women, but being good with people in general, exchange stimuli of positive emotions; and it is going to help your brain make these better connections to what social structure should you use for this particular situation to get the desired outcome you want.

If you have a routine you used all the time that works for you, strip away everything else and try to understand the structure and pattern to why it works, so you can come up with new ones on your own on the spot.

Think about recognizing these social structures like building an architectural blueprint for you subconscious mind as a guide to generate quick responses.

The more structures you have recognized, the faster it is to generate these responses and think quickly on your feet, where without them your brain is stuck without the structures to guide it.

Eventually you will get to the point where you don't have to think about them, everything will just come out of the top of your head.

Final Words

If you want to improve your dating and social skills fast, go out a lot, even go out by yourself if you can so you won't have that safety security of the other person to come back to, and learn and recognize the patterns and social structures that control the response outcome by making mistakes if you have to, and then calibrate for next time.

Once you have done that, everything will be subconscious and automatic and here you have NOT just Natural Game...but GREAT Natural Social Game.

When you have the social skills, meeting and having people from all walks of life adding value to your life and enriching it, meeting women is natural almost effortless, you will be meeting them through their social circle and their friends social circle.

I really hope you enjoyed this book, and you got a lot out of it that will help you start mastering your dating as well as your social life.
